FLORA CASTIGLIA

(Buenos Aires, Argentina, 1991) is an Argentinian visual artist whose work explores the interplay between interior and exterior spaces through contemplative, dreamlike compositions. Introduced to art at an early age by her mother — also an artist — Castiglia developed a strong creative discipline rooted in observation and daily practice. Her early design work for musicians and album covers left a lasting impression on her visual language, which carries a distinctively melodic quality: balanced compositions, organic forms, and a muted, deep color palette. Her paintings merge geometric structures with loose textures, playful patterns, and abstract representations of nature — potted plants, mountains, and symbolic landscapes that blur the line between what is seen and what is imagined. Often incorporating hidden text or diaristic elements, her work invites a slow gaze: to observe, decode, and reencounter the familiar as something mysterious and new. Through the tension between control and spontaneity, order and chaos, Castiglia constructs interdimensional spaces that feel both intimate and expansive — thresholds between the known and the unknown.
